

Edward M. Fortunato

Senior Vice President, Government Relations

Ed Fortunato joined Orbital ATK as Senior Vice President for Government Relations in December 2014. He is responsible for leading the Government Relations team to support the corporation's aviation, space and defense system technologies, products and strategic pursuits.

Ed has extensive acquisition experience in aerospace, defense and acquisition policy throughout all stages of the lifecycle. Prior to Orbital ATK, Ed was an executive in Honeywell's Global Government Relations responsible for defense programs, policy and advocacy efforts with the U.S. Congress, Executive branch and foreign governments. He also led Washington Operations for the Honeywell and Pratt & Whitney, Advanced Turbine Engine Company joint venture.

Ed served in the United States Army in numerous command, staff and program positions managing new venture initiation, program definition, production, operational sustainment and program termination. He served as the Secretary of the Army's representative to the U.S. Congress for Aviation programs, and was responsible for program development and legislative strategy for the National Defense Bill.

Ed earned an MBA with honors from The George Washington University, and a BS in Business from George Mason University. He is a certified Project Management Professional, rated aviator and Six Sigma Green Belt. Ed serves on the Board of Trustees for the National Defense Industrial Association.